

IU Enrollment Census Graphic

The headline of the graphic reads, “New Enrollment Count Change” with an Indiana University trident logo to the left of the text, and a photograph of a high school classroom with students working at their desks.

Beneath the headline is a red, rectangular panel with a subhead that reads, “Indiana University is changing its definition for official census enrollment effective in fall 2017 to no longer include high school students who are taking college courses simultaneously (“dual credit”).

Underneath the rectangular panel is an outline of a male and female scholar, both wearing graduation caps. Above the image reads, “What this could mean:”.

To the right of the scholar outline reads, “An adjustment of 7-29% in campus enrollment numbers.” Above and below the text are two dotted lines. To the right of the text is a collage of four calculator icons.

Below the scholar graphic and text, is another red, rectangular panel, with a closing sentence that reads, “The new definition will produce a more realistic and stable view of enrollment trends and more accurately reflect the breadth of the university’s programs.
