

Mental Health Stigma graphic

This red-and-white graphic starts with black and red, centered text: "Mass violence, mental health and increased stigma." To the left of the headline is the IU trident.

Below that, in black text, it reads: "Analyses showed that in 2018, an increased number of Americans perceived individuals with certain conditions as likely to be dangerous to others."

Below the subhead are four statistical percentages. Each percentage is in a red, horizontal oval. The percentages are in white text. Below each statistical oval is black text.

The statistics read:

- 60 percent believe that of individuals with schizophrenia
- 68 percent believe that of individuals with alcohol dependence
- 30 percent believe that of individuals with major depression
- 20 percent believe that of individuals with non-clinical daily troubles

To the right of the statistics is a silhouette of an individual's head and neck. The graphic is black, except for the outline of the individual's brain, which is white.
